3. Multilateral peace missions

SHARON WIHARTA

I. Peace missions in 2002

The trend towards smaller, short-term and mandate-specific peace missions continued in 2002. Several long-standing missions were closed: the United Nations Mission in Bosnia and Herzegovina (UNMIBH), the United Nations Mission of Observers in Prevlaka (UNMOP) in Croatia, the United Nations Transitional Administration in East Timor (UNTAET), the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE) Assistance Group to Chechnya, NATO’s Task Force Fox (TFF)1 in the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia (FYROM), and the Australian-led International Peace Monitoring Team for the Solomon Islands (IPMT). In the case of two of the closed UN missions, smaller missions were set up with clear, credible and achievable mandates. After seven years in operation, UNMIBH ended its tenure at the end of 2002, and the mandate to oversee the development and strengthening of police forces in Bosnia and Herzegovina was handed over to the European Union Police Mission (EUPM).2 UNTAET was succeeded by the United Nations Mission of Support in East Timor (UNMISET). The two other new UN missions—the United Nations Mission in Angola (UNMA) and the United Nations Assistance Mission in Afghanistan (UNAMA)—were of a more political and peace-building nature, acting as adviser to the host governments. Events in both Angola and Afghanistan prompted the reactivation of dormant UN missions. In East Timor, the largely smooth transition to the independent state of Timor-Leste in May 2002 allowed for an appropriately reduced UN engagement there. Several other missions—particularly in the Balkans—were restructured because of the growing political and security stability in these countries and the successful completion of mission mandates. These changes bring to 48 the total number of multilateral peace missions under way in 2002 (see section II and table 3).

The new emphasis on political and peace-building missions

As part of the effort to bolster the peace missions managed by the Department of Political Affairs (DPA),3 the UN initiated two peace-building operations, UNAMA and UNMA, which were given stronger mandates and more

1 Task Force Fox is also referred to as Amber Fox. It was briefly succeeded by Operation Allied Harmony; see chapter 6 in this volume.
2 The EUPM began operations on 1 Jan. 2003.
3 DPA-mandated missions are not initiated under Chapters VI, (‘pacific settlement of disputes’) or VII (‘action with respect to threats of breaches of the peace, and acts of aggression’) of the UN Charter and consequently do not have peace-enforcement mandates.

SIPRI Yearbook 2003: Armaments, Disarmament and International Security resources than earlier political and peace-building missions. They are ‘multidimensional’, encompassing all the aspects of peace building—immediate humanitarian relief assistance, institution building, law and order functions, and economic recovery. These missions represent a new phase of intervention and contain their own clear exit strategies. The policy is consistent with the recommendation of UN Secretary-General Kofi Annan: the concluding mandate of a peacekeeping operation ‘should include specific recommendations for the transitional period to the post-conflict phase’.4

UNAMA, initiated in March 2002, is a prime example of this new type of mission. It has a much larger staff than the mission it succeeded and, with its two-pillar structure—political affairs, and relief, recovery and reconstruction—consolidates all the UN actors in Afghanistan.5 Despite its personnel strength, the mission was intended to take a ‘light footprint’ approach so as to allow the nascent government to take ownership of the peace-building process within the security framework provided by the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF).6

UNMA followed a similar pattern. It was established in August 2002 as the successor mission of the United Nations Office in Angola (UNOA) with a view to systematically assist the new Angolan Government in the peacebuilding process. It was recognized that the UNOA’s mandate was insufficient for the mission to address the new challenges that it would meet in helping to consolidate the peace in Angola.

The death of Jonas Savimbi, the leader of União Nacional Para a Indepen-dência Total de Angola (UNITA, National Union for the Total Independence of Angola), on 22 February 2002 provided the impetus for efforts to end the 27-year civil war. Previous contacts between the Forças Armadas de Angola (FAA, Armed Forces of Angola) and UNITA were quickly resumed with a view to negotiating a ceasefire and ending the war. The Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) signed by the Angolan Government and UNITA on 4 April specified the modalities of a simultaneous ceasefire, UNITA troop disarmament, and collection and destruction of weapons. The Joint Military Commission (comprised of members of the FAA and UNITA and representatives of UNMA, Portugal, Russia and the USA) was reinstated to supervise implementation of the MOU.7 UNMA was mandated to assist in the disarmament, demobilization and reintegration process; ensure the coordination of humanitarian assistance to the 500 000 internally displaced persons (IDPs) and the soldiers held in quartering camps awaiting demobilization; provide technical assistance for demining; assist in the national reconciliation process through the promotion and protection of human rights; and provide advice on

7 United Nations, Report of the Secretary-General to the Security Council on Angola, UN document the development of democratic institutions.\textsuperscript{8} The organization of the mission was critical for its success: efforts were made to coordinate the work of the appropriate UN agencies under the humanitarian/development/economic recovery component of the mission to facilitate cooperation and an integrated approach.

The initial generous financial and political commitment of donor states to UNAMA allowed it to successfully carry out its mandate in Afghanistan. However, this commitment has not been sustained and both contributions and political support are dwindling. Although both UNAMA and UNMA received an infusion of support, the levels differed: $1.8 million was pledged for Afghanistan, but a donor conference has not even been convened for Angola, in spite of the fact that the Secretary-General identified Angola as ‘one of the three countries in Africa most in need of post-conflict and peace-building assistance’.\textsuperscript{9} At the end of UNMA’s six-month mandate, it was decided that the mission would not be extended; instead, the Office of the Resident Coordinator is to assume the role of assisting the Angolan Government. The efforts to reach a viable peace in Angola are challenged by critical problems. Close to the end of UNMA’s term, 150 000 ex-combatants were still not quartered or demobilized, and several thousand were waiting to be properly reintegrated into society. Approximately 2.8 million Angolans are displaced, and an estimated 1.2 million IDPs were expected to return to their places of origin in the first half of 2003. The newly installed Angolan Government is struggling to deal with these problems but, without the ‘high profile’ presence of a UN mission, there is a danger that the interest of the donor community will wane.

\textbf{The UN Mission of Support in East Timor}

The launch of UNMISET in May 2002 as a follow-on operation to UNTAET marked the termination of the UN’s interim administration of East Timor and the gradual devolution of authority to the government of Timor-Leste. UNMISET’s main objectives are to provide technical expertise to assist the government in building up core administrative structures, to maintain law and order together with the local police service, and to provide external security and border control.\textsuperscript{10} The ultimate objectives are to drastically diminish the UN’s executive policing presence in Timor-Leste by 2004 by augmenting democratic, judicial, political and social institutional capacities, and to shift UN involvement into the more traditional role of development assistance. By the end of 2002, the Timor-Leste police service was solely responsible for law enforcement in 4 of the 13 districts and began to assume responsibility for border control. Given the relatively stable situation there, UNMISET was also able to proceed with its plans to downsize its military component.

Peace operations in the Balkans

Peace operations in the Balkans underwent several significant changes in 2002. As the political and security situation stabilized and local institutional capacities developed, the need for large, broad-based missions was not as great. Donor fatigue also contributed to the international community’s reluctance to maintain large, open-ended missions. As a result, the long-standing NATO operations—the Stabilization Force (SFOR) and the Kosovo Force (KFOR)—completed their phased drawdown of authorized strength. SFOR reduced its troop strength from 20,000 to about 12,000 and has a new structure of 10 battle groups of roughly 750 soldiers each, under the direct command and control of the respective Multinational Brigades Headquarters. Similarly, by the end of the year KFOR had reduced its personnel to 30,000.

In the FYROM, the smooth elections and transition of government allowed Task Force Fox to be wound down. The new Operation Allied Harmony was the third instalment of NATO’s engagement there. At the end of the TFF’s term, the FYROM Government requested a continued NATO presence in the country. The NATO North Atlantic Council agreed that, while the political and security situation in Macedonia had improved markedly, there was still a need for an international presence, albeit a smaller one. Thus on 16 December 2002, Allied Harmony was launched for a period of six months with the aim of continuing to provide support to the international monitors present in Macedonia and to advise the FYROM Government in matters related to security sector reform.

The most significant development in Balkans peace operations was the shift in the lead actor. The EU assumed the tasks previously undertaken by the police component of UNMIBH. This was not the case, however, with NATO’s Balkans operations. The EU had intended to take over TFF upon the initial expiry of its mandate in October, but a long-standing veto by Turkey on the issue of EU access to NATO military assets delayed the handover. The deadlock was resolved in December and the agreement allowing for NATO logistical support to EU-led operations took effect. Thus, the EU is scheduled to assume control of peace operations in the FYROM upon the termination of Operation Allied Harmony in March 2003 and has indicated its willingness to take over SFOR in 2004.

II. Table of multilateral peace missions

Table 3 lists 48 multilateral peace missions (observer, peacekeeping, peace-building, and combined peacekeeping and peace enforcement operations) initiated, ongoing or terminated in 2002. The missions are grouped by organization, either sole or lead, and listed chronologically within these groups.

The first group, covering UN missions, is divided into three sections: 16 operations run by the Department of Peacekeeping Operations; 3 missions that are defined as political missions (i.e., not under Chapters VI or VII of the UN Charter) and jointly coordinated by the Department of Political Affairs and the Department of Peacekeeping Operations; and 1 mission initiated by UN authority but carried out at UN request by an ad hoc coalition of member states. The next five groups cover missions conducted or led by regional organizations: 11 by the OSCE; 4 by NATO; 1 by the EU; 3 by the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS), including 1 mission carried out by Russia under bilateral arrangements; and 3 by the African Union (AU). A final group lists 6 missions led by other organizations or ad hoc coalitions of states recognized by the UN. Peace missions comprising non-resident individuals or teams of negotiators or operations not sanctioned by the UN are not included.

Missions initiated in 2002, or new participating states in an existing mission, are listed in bold text; operations or individual participation ending in 2002 are in italics. Legal instruments underlying the establishment of an operation: UN Security Council resolutions or formal decisions by regional organizations are cited in the first column. Personnel numbers include civilian observers or civilian staff only where indicated. The main exception is for observers in OSCE missions, who are usually civilian. Mission fatalities are recorded from the beginning of the mission until the last reported date for 2002 and as a total for 2002. Unless otherwise stated all figures are as of 31 December 2002. Budget figures are given in millions of US dollars. For UN operations, unless otherwise stated, budget figures are for the fiscal year 1 July 2002–30 June 2003. Conversion from budgets set in other currencies are based on 31 December 2002 conversion rates.

20 E.g., a coalition of countries initiated a peace operation in the Nuba Mountains region of Sudan as part of the 2002 Nuba Mountains Ceasefire Agreement; in Aceh, a group of international peace monitors were sent at the end of 2002 to observe the ceasefire between the Gerekan Aceh Merdeka (GAM, Free Aceh Movement) and the Indonesian Government.

UNFICYP was established by SCR 186 (4 Mar. 1964) to prevent fighting between the Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot communities and to contribute to the maintenance and restoration of law and order. Since 1974 UNFICYP’s mandate has included monitoring the ceasefire and maintaining a buffer zone between the 2 sides. The mandate was extended until 15 June 2003 by SCR 1442 (25 Nov. 2002).

UNDOF was established after the 1973 Middle East War under the Agreement on Disengagement and SCR 350 (31 May 1974), to maintain the ceasefire between Israel and Syria and to supervise the disengagement of Israeli and Syrian forces. The mandate was extended until 30 June 2003 by SCR 1451 (17 Dec. 2002).

UNIFIL was established by SCR 425 (19 Mar. 1978), to confirm the withdrawal of Israeli forces from southern Lebanon and to assist the Government of Lebanon in ensuring the return of its effective authority in the area. The mandate was renewed until 31 July 2003 by SCR 1461 (30 Jan. 2003).

UNIKOM was established by SCR 689 (9 Apr. 1991) as an unarmed observation mission with the mandate to monitor the Khawr `Abd Allah waterway and the DMZ and to observe any hostile actions between the 2 states. In Feb. 1993 the mandate was expanded with the addition of an infantry battalion by SCR 806 (5 Feb. 1993) to prevent small-scale violations of the DMZ and the borders.
MINURSO was established by SCR 690 (29 Apr. 1991) to monitor the ceasefire between the Frente Polisario and the Moroccan Government, verify the reduction of Moroccan troops in Western Sahara, and organize a free and fair referendum. The mandate was renewed until 31 Mar. 2003 by SCR 1463 (30 Jan. 2003).
38 United Nations (note 1).
39 United Nations (note 1).
40 United Nations (note 2).
42 UNOMIG was established by SCR 849 (9 July 1993) and SCR 858 (24 Aug. 1993). The mission’s original mandate of verifying the ceasefire between the Georgian Government and the Abkhaz authorities was invalidated by resumed fighting in Abkhazia in Sep. 1993, and UNOMIG was given an interim mandate to maintain contacts with both sides to the conflict and with Russian military contingents and to monitor and report on the situation. Following the signing of the 1994 Agreement on a Ceasefire and Separation of Forces, UNOMIG’s mandate was expanded to include monitoring and verification of the implementation of the agreement by SCR 937 (27 July 1994). The current mandate was renewed until 31 July 2003 by SCR 1462 (30 Jan. 2003).

44 United Nations (note 1).
45 United Nations (note 2).
49 As of 30 Sep. 2002. The mission also had 395 international civilian personnel and was supported by 1174 local staff. United Nations (note 1).
50 United Nations (note 2).
53 UNMOP was established by SCR 1038 (15 Jan. 1996) to monitor the demilitarization of the Prevlaka peninsula, hitherto carried out by UNPROFOR and UNCRO. Its mandate was extended until 15 Dec. 2002 by SCR 1437 (11 Oct. 2002).
55 The mission also has 3 international civilian personnel and is supported by 6 locally employed staff. United Nations (note 54).
UNMIK was established by SCR 1244 (10 June 1999). Its main tasks are: promoting the establishment of substantial autonomy and self-government in Kosovo; civilian administrative functions; maintaining law and order; promoting human rights; and assuring the safe return of all refugees and displaced persons. A positive decision by the Security Council is required to terminate the mission. SCR 1244 (10 June 1999), Article 19.

UNAMSIL was established by SCR 1270 (22 Oct. 1999) following the signature of the Lomé Peace Agreement between the Sierra Leone Government and the Revolutionary United Front (RUF) on 7 July 1999. The tasks of the mission were to include assisting in the implementation of the Lomé Agreement, monitoring adherence to the ceasefire, encouraging the parties to create confidence-building mechanisms, supporting the anticipated elections, and ensuring the security and freedom of movement of UN personnel. SCR 1436 (24 Sep. 2002) extended the mandate until 31 Mar. 2003, but also called for a phased downsizing of the mission by about 4500 personnel.

MONUC was established by SCR 1279 (30 Nov. 1999). It is mandated to liaise with the Joint Military Commission (JMC), plan for the observation of the ceasefire and the disengagement of forces, and provide humanitarian assistance. In 2000 the mandate was expanded to include the deployment of c. 5000 troops to protect UN and JMC personnel and civilians under imminent threat of violence. UN document S/2000/1291, 24 Feb. 2000. SCR 1417 (14 June 2002) authorized the deployment of some 85 police trainers and extended the mission’s mandate until 30 June 2003. On 4 Dec. 2002 its authorized mission strength was augmented to 8700, to be deployed on a phased basis to work on DDR projects.

UNTAET was established by SCR 1272 (25 Oct. 1999). The mission was endowed with overall responsibility for the administration of East Timor and empowered to exercise all legislative and executive authority, including the administration of justice. The military component of UNTAET replaced INTERFET on 23 Feb. 2000. Its mandate was extended until 20 May 2002 by SCR 1392 (31 Jan. 2002), the date on which East Timor gained independence.

UNMEE was established by SCR 1312 (31 July 2000). The mission was mandated to prepare a mechanism for verifying the cessation of hostilities, the establishment of the Military Co-ordination Commission provided for in the ceasefire agreement, and a peacekeeping deployment. The mission was later expanded with the allocation of 4200 troops and 220 military observers and tasked to monitor the ceasefire, repatriate Ethiopian troops and monitor the positions of Ethiopian and Eritrean troops outside a UNMISET was established by SCR 1410 (17 May 2002) as a follow-on mission to UNTAET for an initial period of 12 months. The tasks of the mission are to provide assistance to the administrative structures of the Timorese Government, to provide interim law enforcement while assisting in the development of a new law enforcement agency, and to contribute to the overall security of Timor-Leste.

UNMISET was established by SCR 1410 (17 May 2002) as a follow-on mission to UNTAET for an initial period of 12 months. The tasks of the mission are to provide assistance to the administrative structures of the Timorese Government, to provide interim law enforcement while assisting in the development of a new law enforcement agency, and to contribute to the overall security of Timor-Leste.

Email from Hector Rondon-Fuentes, MINUGUA, 22 Nov. 2002.

Includes 4 military observers and 69 international civilian observers. The mission is supported by 139 local staff and 66 UN volunteers. Email from Rondon-Fuentes (note 89).

UNAMA was established by SCR 1401 (28 Mar. 2002) for an initial period of 1 year, until 27 Mar. 2003. Several components of the now closed UNSMA (UN Special Mission to Afghanistan) mission were incorporated into the UNAMA structure. The mission is mandated to promote national reconciliation; to fulfill the tasks and responsibilities entrusted to the UN in the 2001 Bonn Agreement, including those related to human rights, the rule of law and gender issues; and to manage all UN humanitarian, relief, recovery and reconstruction activities in Afghanistan in coordination with the Afghan Administration.

The military observers are advisors and do not go out to the field. This mission consists mainly of 165 international civilian staff and is supported by 255 local staff. Fax from Gayane Afrikian, UNAMA, 5 Jan. 2003; and United Nations (note 1).

Fax from Afrikian (note 96).
UNMA was established by SCR 1433 (15 Aug 2002) as a follow-on mission to UNOA (United Nations Office in Angola) for an initial period of 6 months, until 15 Feb 2003. The mission is mandated to assist the parties in concluding the remaining tasks of the 1994 Lusaka Protocol. The mission has two ‘pillars’—a political/military/human rights cluster and a humanitarian/development cluster. The mission was able to successfully fulfill its mandated tasks and therefore will not be renewed. United Nations, Report of the Secretary-General on the UN Mission in Angola, S/2003/158, 7 Feb. 2003.

The countries listed are those that have contributed military observers; the countries from which the international civilian personnel come could not be verified. United Nations (note 1).

OMIB (or MIOB, Mission de l'OAU au Burundi) was established on 7 Dec. 1993 by the Central Organ of the OAU Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Resolution and Management. The mission’s mandate, to promote dialogue between military and government leaders, was endorsed by a treaty between the OAU and Burundi, 8 Apr. 1994. Ognimba, E., ‘Connaissance de la Mission de l'OUA au Burundi’ [Briefing on the OAU Mission in Burundi], Resolving Conflicts, Feb.–Mar. 1996, p. 10. OMIB was effectively withdrawn in July 1996. Fax from Said Djinnit, Assistant Secretary General, Political Affairs Department, AU, 29 Oct. 2001.

The mission consists of 3 international civilian staff, 1 military staff. The mission is supported by 8 local staff. Fax from Doulaye (note 204).

Fax from Doulaye (note 204).

At the 81st Ordinary Session, the AU decided to add a military observers component (OMIC-III) to the Liaison Office, which was deployed under the same SOMA signed in 1997. The mission lasted from 23 Mar. to 31 May 2002 and was mandated to ‘Assist the Comorien Authorities in strengthening security during and after the electoral period’. The liaison office remains and consists of a Chief of Liaison Office/Special Representative of the Secretary General of the OAU, a Finance Officer and a Secretary. Email from Doulaye, 27 Dec. 2002.

Email from Doulaye (note 210).

Budget is for both the Liaison Office and OMIC-III, which are $327 093.40 and $395 655.48 respectively. Fax from Doulaye (note 204).

The JMC was formally established on 3 Sep. 1999 with a mandate to monitor compliance with the provisions of the July Lusaka Ceasefire Agreement and to investigate violations. OAU, Report of the Secretary-General on the DRC Peace Process, OAU Central Organ/MEC/AMB/3, 23 Sep. 1999.
The JMC consists of personnel from Kenya and the 9 parties to the conflict. In addition to the states listed, these parties include the Rassemblement Congolais pour la Démocratie, the Rassemblement Congolais pour la Démocratie–Goma, the Rassemblement Congolais pour la Démocratie–Kisangi, and the Mouvement de la Libération Congolais. Fax from Djinnit (note 203); and Fax from Jean Mfasoni, Ag. Director, Political Affairs Department, 30 Nov. 2001.

The exact figure for mission personnel is not known because in 2002 there were no AU representatives in the mission. Apart from the JMC Chairman and his AU liaison officer (both of whom are attached to the JMC headquarters) the regional JMCs were staffed primarily by officers from the DRC Government and the other parties to the conflict. This number was not disclosed to the AU. Email from Commodore Mesfin Binega, Military Consultant, Conflict Management Division, AU, 4 Apr. 2002.
