

Appendix 3A. Multilateral peace operations, 2009

KIRSTEN SODER AND KRISTER KARLSSON

I. Introduction

This appendix describes developments in peace operations in 2009 and draws on data collected in the SIPRI Multilateral Peace Operations Database to analyse trends in peace operations in the 10-year period 2000–2009.¹ The data presented here is a year-end snapshot for ongoing peace operations in 2009 and is meant to serve as a reference point to enable comparative analysis between 2009 and previous years.² Global trends are presented in section II and regional trends in section III. The sources and methods used when collecting the data are described in section IV, followed by details of all multilateral peace operations active during 2009.

II. Global trends

A total of 54 peace operations were conducted in 2009, taking place in 34 different locations. Six operations closed during 2008 and no new operation was launched in 2009, resulting in the first fall in the total number of operations since 2002 (see figure 3A.1). However, the upward trend in the number of deployed personnel continued into 2009: deployment totals increased by 16 per cent over 2008 to reach 219 278, 89 per cent of which were military personnel and 11 per cent were civilian staff (see figure 3A.2).³ The known cost of peace operations reached a new record of $9.1 billion.

Over the decade 2000–2009, the annual number of peace operations first fell, to a low of 49 in 2002, then rose steadily, to reach 60 operations in 2008. This trend was reversed in 2009: with a total of 54 operations in 2009, the decade ended with the same number as it began in 2000 (see figure 3A.1). The number of deployed personnel initially followed a similar trend, as the 2000 level of 135 000 personnel decreased to the 10-year low of 102 525 in 2002. However, deployment levels then increased continually; in 2009 the total surpassed the 200 000 mark and was more than double the 2002 low (see figure 3A.2).⁴

² The figures for personnel deployments given in this appendix are generally estimates as of 31 Dec. 2009 or the date on which an operation terminated. They do not represent maximum numbers deployed or the total number of personnel deployed during the year.

³ The number of civilians includes civilian observers, civilian police and civilian staff. See also chapter 3, figure 3.1.

Reflecting these trends, the number of operations with at least 5000 personnel has doubled since 2000, to reach 10 in 2009.

Principal conducting organizations

In 2009 the United Nations remained the main conductor of peace operations, conducting 21 operations with a total of 105 120 personnel. These accounted for 48 per cent of all personnel deployed. Although the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) conducted only 3 missions in 2009, it deployed 96 979 personnel, or 44 per cent of the total.⁵ The European Union (EU), with 12 operations, and the African Union (AU), with 1 operation, each deployed just over 5000 personnel.

Seven of the UN's operations had more than 5000 personnel, including two—the UN Organization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) and the AU/UN Hybrid Operation in Darfur (UNAMID)—with more than 20 000 personnel. These are the first UN operations with more than 20 000 personnel since the UN Protection Force (UNPROFOR) in the former Yugoslavia ended in 1995.

Despite additional deployments to operations carried out by the UN and the AU, disparities between authorized and actual personnel levels persisted in 2009. The UN missions MONUC, UNAMID and the UN Mission in the Central African Republic and Chad (MINURCAT) raised their deployment levels in 2009, but still fell short of authorized numbers and contributed in large part to the UN's total shortfall of 15 700 personnel. However, the disparity between UN authorized and actual deployed personnel in 2009 was half the level of 2007. A similar pattern applied to the AU Mission in Somalia (AMISOM): even with the additional troops deployed in 2009, the mission's deployment level was still 3000 below its authorized strength.

Three peace operations ended during 2009—one conducted by the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe (OSCE), one conducted by the UN and one conducted by the EU (see section III).

Deployment levels

With no new operations in 2009, the increase in the number of personnel deployed was due to troop reinforcement for existing operations, most significantly for the NATO-led International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) in Afghanistan. For the fourth year running, ISAF was the largest operation, and during the year it became the largest ever NATO operation, as its troop level increased from 51 356 to 84 146—an increase of 64 per cent.⁶ ISAF was nearly four times larger than the next largest operation, MONUC. In fact, the number of ISAF troops exceeded the total number deployed to the 12 UN peace operations with troops (83 089 troops, including UNAMID) and was also higher than the total number of troops deployed to the 11 operations carried out in Africa (69 757 troops).

The classification of ISAF as a peace operation is contentious and has potentially significant methodological consequences. In addition to the UN-mandated task of providing security, ISAF has taken on the tasks of helping Afghan authorities to strengthen good governance and the rule of law and supporting reconstruction and development.⁷ The latter tasks were a significant, although never dominant, part of ISAF's activities in the first years after its deployment in 2001. However, since 2006, when ISAF expanded its area of operation into the south and east of Afghanistan, it has become more and more engaged in the fight against insurgents alongside the US-led Operation Enduring Freedom–Afghanistan (OEF-A).⁸ In 2009 nearly 33 000 additional troops were deployed to ISAF—almost 26 000 of them US troops—to 'stabilize the deteriorating situation in Afghanistan' and support the Afghan security forces in counterinsurgency efforts against the Taliban.⁹ This shift to counterinsurgency arguably goes beyond the tactical use of force as employed by a robust peace operation—it is now a core part of ISAF's aims and activities.¹⁰

The function of peace operations has continuously evolved since they were first deployed in the mid-20th century. Peace operations were originally tasked with monitoring ceasefires and deploying interpositional forces to separate warring parties. In response to the changing nature of conflict since the early 1990s, these tasks have given way to a 'complex model of many elements'.¹¹ Several recent peace operations have become more involved in continuing hostilities between governmental forces and insurgents; in some cases (e.g. MONUC), peace operations have used force for reasons other than self-defence. The activities of operations such as ISAF or the Multinational Force in Iraq (MNF-I) may signal the onset of another phase in the evolution of peace-keeping in which the 'old walls that initially segregated peace operations from war-fighting are crumbling'.¹²

Since ISAF accounted for 38 per cent of all personnel deployed to peace operations in 2009, its classification as a peace operation has a significant impact on the global trend in multilateral peace operations. Excluding ISAF from the data set on multilateral peace operations paints a very different picture for 2009 and the past decade. Excluding ISAF, a total of 135 132 personnel were deployed to 53 peace operations in 2009, and the upward trend in deployed personnel over the decade is much less sharp (see figure 3A.2). Excluding ISAF, there was a slight decrease in deployment numbers in 2009 compared to 2008, and between 2002 and 2009 the number of personnel deployed increased by only 31 per cent (down from over 100 per cent when including ISAF). Excluding ISAF, the UN is by far the largest conductor of peace operations; it accounted for 78 per cent of all personnel deployed (including UNAMID). While personnel deployment to UN operations has increased almost continuously over the past 10 years, the number of personnel deployed to non-UN peace operations other than ISAF has steadily decreased.

The large size of ISAF also influences the ranking of countries contributing military personnel (including troops and military observers) as of December 2009 (see figure 3A.3). When including ISAF, the USA is by far the largest contributor of military personnel to peace operations: it provided 47 962 of the total of 194 862 military personnel deployed by 111 countries. Excluding ISAF, a total of 110 716 military personnel from 107 countries were deployed as of December 2009. Eight of the top 10 contributing countries came from either Africa or Asia and sent troops exclusively to UN operations; only Italy and France participated in non-UN missions.

As of December 2009 a total of 14 468 civilian police were deployed on peace operations by 108 countries. UN operations accounted for 88 per cent of deployed civilian police, roughly the same share as in 2008. All of the top 10 contributing countries are in Asia or Africa and these two regions account for 70 per cent of the civilian police deployed (see figure 3A.4). In contrast, countries in the Americas contributed only 3 per cent, the lowest regional share.

III. Regional trends

The increase in personnel deployments in 2009 was due to deployments to Africa and Asia. Asia replaced Africa as the region to which most personnel on peace operations were deployed. ISAF personnel accounted for 95 per cent of the personnel deployed to Asia.

In Africa, personnel deployed in 2009 increased by 8 per cent over 2008, while the number of operations fell by three (see table 3A.1). The vast majority of the personnel were sent to six operations conducted by the UN, the AU or jointly that had 5000 or more personnel.¹³ While 84 per cent of personnel deployed to Africa are military, the relative increases in the numbers of civilian staff and civilian police were much higher: over the decade 2000–2009, the number of civilian staff increased nearly sixfold (from 821 to 4598) and the number of civilian police more than 140-fold (from 65 to 9201).¹⁴ The EU Military Operation in Chad and the Central African Republic (EUFOR Tchad/RCA) closed in March 2009, as planned after one year of operation; the mission's mandate was transferred to MINURCAT.

With two operations fewer than in 2008, Europe was the only region in which there was a significant decrease in deployment numbers in 2009. Deployment numbers decreased by 26 per cent compared to 2008 and by 76 per cent over the decade 2000–2009. The latest reduction in the deployment numbers was due to the termination of the Commonwealth of Independent States (CIS) operations in Georgia in 2008, the restructuring and down-sizing of the NATO Kosovo Force (KFOR), and the continued reduction of the UN presence in Europe.¹⁵ The UN Administration Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK) decreased its deployment level by 87 per cent (from 1236 to 163 personnel) during 2009, and by the end of the year the UN stationed only 1362 personnel in Europe. This was the lowest number since the UN first deployed a peace operation to Europe, in 1964, and was also the lowest number of UN personnel deployed to any region in 2009.¹⁶

During 2009, two missions in Europe—one conducted by the UN and one by the OSCE—ended as a consequence of the August 2008 conflict between Georgia and Russia. The mandate of the UN Observer Mission in Georgia (UNOMIG) was not renewed by the UN Security Council, and the mission closed in June 2009. Russia, which recognizes Abkhazia and South Ossetia as independent states, vetoed the extension of the mission's mandate as the language used in draft resolutions referred to Georgia's territorial integrity.¹⁷

¹⁵ The number of KFOR personnel fell from 14 411 in 2008 to 12 662 in Oct. 2009 and to c. 11 500 by Dec. 2009.

¹⁶ The UN Peacekeeping Force in Cyprus (UNFICYP) was first deployed in Mar. 1964.

The OSCE Mission to Georgia finally ended in 2009. Russia had vetoed the extension of the operation in 2008, and the mandate of the unarmed military monitors deployed to the mission in August 2008 under a separate OSCE Permanent Council decision ended in June 2009. With the termination of the two CIS operations during 2008, the EU Monitoring Mission in Georgia (EUMM) is now the only multilateral peace operation in Georgia.¹⁸

The number of operations carried out in the Middle East remained stable at 10 in 2009. The number of personnel was slightly lower than in 2008 due to a reduction in the number of troops of the UN Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL), which accounted for 76 per cent of the personnel deployed in the region.

No significant changes occurred in the Americas in 2009: the two existing operations in the region remained active and the number of deployment personnel was largely unchanged. All but 30 of the personnel in the region were deployed to the UN Stabilization Mission in Haiti (MINUSTAH). The mission's daily operations were disrupted by an earthquake in Haiti on 12 January 2010, which destroyed 50 per cent of the capital, Port-au-Prince, killed over 200 000 people and displaced up to 1 million more.¹⁹ MINUSTAH's headquarters collapsed and 102 UN personnel were killed in what the UN Secretary-General, Ban Ki-moon, described as 'the single biggest loss in the history of [the UN].'²⁰ MINUSTAH immediately responded with rescue teams, emergency relief and the coordination of international assistance.²¹ Security Council Resolution 1908 increased the operation's military component by 2000 troops (to a total of 8940) and 1500 police (to a total of 3711).²² As the lead organization for response and recovery in Haiti, the UN's efforts are scheduled to continue for at least 12 months and are likely to continue for far longer.²³ While MINUSTAH will focus on addressing problems of shelter and sanitation before the onset of the rainy season in May, the remainder of 2010 is likely to be dedicated to working towards the re-establishment of security, stability and state authority, as outlined in the benchmarks of the 2009 consolidation plan.²⁴

IV. Table of multilateral peace operations

Table 3A.2 provides data on the 54 multilateral peace operations that were conducted during 2009, including operations that were launched or terminated during the year. The table lists operations that were conducted under the authority of the UN and operations conducted by regional organizations and alliances or by ad hoc (non-standing) coalitions of states that were sanctioned by the UN or authorized by a UN Security Council resolution, with the stated intention to: (a) serve as an instrument to facilitate the implementation of peace agreements already in place, (b) support a peace process, or (c) assist conflict-prevention or peacebuilding efforts.

SIPRI follows the UN Department of Peacekeeping Operations (DPKO) description of peacekeeping as a mechanism to assist conflict-afflicted countries to create conditions for sustainable peace. Peacekeeping tasks may include monitoring and observing ceasefire agreements; serving as confidence-building measures; protecting the delivery of humanitarian assistance; assisting with the demobilization and reintegration processes; strengthening institutional capacities in the areas of judiciary and the rule of law (including penal institutions), policing, and human rights; electoral support; and economic and social development. Table 3A.2 thus covers a broad range of peace operations, reflecting the growing complexity of operation mandates and the potential for operations to change over time. The table does not include good offices, fact-finding or electoral assistance missions, nor does it include peace operations comprising non-resident individuals or teams of negotiators, or operations not sanctioned by the UN.

The operations are grouped in the table by the entity conducting them and listed chronologically within these groups. UN operations are divided into three subgroups: 15 observer and multidimensional peace operations run by the DPKO; 5 special political and peacebuilding missions; and the joint AU-UN mission in Darfur, UNAMID. The next seven groups include operations conducted or led by regional organizations or alliances: the AU (1 operation), the Communauté Économique des États de l'Afrique Centrale (CEEAC, the Economic Community of Central African States, 1 operation); the CIS (1 operation); the EU (12 operations); NATO (3 operations); the Organization of American States (OAS, 1 operation); and the OSCE (8 operations). The final group includes 6 UN-sanctioned operations led by ad hoc coalitions.

Operations that were launched in 2009 and new states joining an existing operation are shown in bold type. Operations and individual state participation that ended in 2009 are shown in italic type. Designated lead states (i.e. those that either have operational control or contribute the most personnel) are underlined for operations that have a police or military component. The legal instruments underlying the establishment of an operation—UN Security Council resolutions or formal decisions by regional organizations—and the date of first deployment of the operation are given in the first column.

The figures for approved personnel numbers listed are those most recently authorized for 2009. Numbers of locally recruited support staff and volunteers are not included in the table but, where available, are given in the notes. For EU operations, the approved total civilian personnel number is given in the civilian police row. Complete information on national contributions to the operations can be found in the SIPRI Multilateral Peace Operations Database.²⁵ The category 'observers' includes both military and civilian observers.

Personnel fatalities are recorded since the beginning of an operation and in 2009. Causes of death—whether accidental, by hostile act or through illness—are recorded for fatalities in 2009. As causes of death were not reported for all deaths in the year, these figures do not always add up to the total annual fatality figure. While the UN provides data on fatalities of locally recruited staff, other organizations or alliances do not.

Costs are reported in millions of US dollars at current prices. The budget figures are given for the calendar year rather than for financial years, in order to allow comparison of operations. Costs for the calendar year are calculated on the assumption of an even rate of spending throughout the financial year. Budgets set in currencies other than the US dollar are converted based on the International Monetary Fund's aggregated market exchange rates for 2009.²⁶ The costs recorded for UN and OSCE operations are the amounts budgeted. The figures provided for other operations represent actual spending.

The costs recorded for UN operations are core operational costs, which include the cost of deploying personnel, per diem payments for deployed personnel and direct non-field support costs (e.g. requirements for the support account for peacekeeping operations and the UN logistics base in Brindisi, Italy). The cost of UN peacekeeping operations is shared by all UN member states through a specially derived scale of assessed contributions that takes no account of their participation in the operations. Political and peacebuilding operations are funded through regular budget assessments. UN peacekeeping budgets do not cover programmatic costs, such as those for disarmament, demobilization and reintegration, which are financed by voluntary contributions. The costs recorded for operations conducted by NATO only represent common costs. These include mainly the running costs of the NATO headquarters (i.e. costs for civilian personnel and costs for operation and maintenance) and investments in the infrastructure necessary to support the operation. The costs of deploying personnel are borne by individual contributing states and are not reflected in the figures given here. Most EU operations are financed in one of two ways: civilian missions are funded through the Community budget, while military operations or operations with a military component are funded by contributions by the participating member states through the Athena mechanism.²⁷ For CIS operations no figures are provided as there is no

²⁶ Details on the budgets of peace operations are available from the SIPRI Multilateral Peace Operations Database (note 1).

²⁷ The Athena mechanism is an instrument for the administration of common costs in EU operations with military or defense implications. The mechanism was agreed in Council Decision 2007/384/CFSP of 14 May 2007, Official Journal of the European Union, L152, 13 June 2007; and updated by Council Decision 2008/975/CFSP of 18 Dec. 2008 establishing a mechanism to administer the designated common budget and countries participating in the missions bear the cost of troop deployments. In operations conducted or led by other organizations, such as by the OAS or ad hoc coalitions, budget figures may include resources for programme implementation.

For all these reasons, the budget figures presented in table 3A.2 are estimates and the budgets for different operations should not be compared.

Unless otherwise stated, all figures are as of 31 December 2009 or, in the case of operations that were terminated in 2009, the date of closure.

Data on multilateral peace operations are obtained from the following categories of open source: (a) official information provided by the secretariat of the organization concerned; (b) information provided by operations themselves, either in official publications or in written responses to annual SIPRI questionnaires; and (c) information from national governments contributing to the operation under consideration. In some instances, SIPRI researchers may gather additional information on an operation from the conducting organizations or governments of participating states by means of telephone interviews. These primary sources are supplemented with a wide selection of publicly available secondary sources consisting of specialist journals, research reports, news agencies, and international, regional and local newspapers.
